Instant Replay Run 53, Hare: Gweye Lehr Moh; Bar. Smith's Tavern, 440 5th Ave

Gweye Lehr Moh pulled off one of the best visual stunts in virgin hare history by using colored chalk that we could see. This is in distinct contrast to his predecessors, all of whom used the same colored chalk so we couldn't see it, or because it was so cute, so colorful, so . . . pastel. Another inauspicious event, starting at a corner without a subway stop, also worked out quite nicely as everyone, including Scott, found the start. The third, and perhaps most satisfying event was Gweye Lehr Moh giving the pack the direction of the on trail while DB2 was fussing with his jacket, tying his shoe laces, pomading his hair, something other than paying attention. So the pack took off, DB2 remained at the start, then assisted the hare in relaying the bags to the hashmobile. Seems Hare GLM had forgotten to tell the pack to take the bags there themselves.

After a bit of running around the trail ran up to Prospect Park, where it headed south, or so we thought. Actually, the trail had gone into the park, but the pack found the on trail without noticing there was a check. This was great for the pack, terribly unfortunate for Hamish Haggisbreath, who found the check a few minutes after the pack and decided the on trail was straight ahead rather than to the right as the pack had done. Dave Hardy also was caught out, but managed to pump those legs fast enough to catch up twenty minutes later. More of The Hamish later.

Meanwhile the pack was passing Farrell's, thinking what a fine thing it would be indeed if we got to the On On before we got to the first check. It was not to be. More running around, including a nice spot through some pedestrian walkways which were totally dark, totally deserted. Marie Wickham led us through these dangerous looking alleys. Fortunately for us she's so threatening looking that no one bothered us.

The finish at Smith's was most welcome; good brews on tap, including the Bass we drank, mostly. A pool was assembled for Haggisbreath, since we were in the bar in about 45 minutes (well done, Gweye Lehr Moh), and as those who had been behind Hamish came in, a pool seemed the right thing to do. The times selected ranged from 1 hour, 30 minutes (Schnipper) to 2 hours, 1 minutes (Laurence Dubelle, a barfly from the 50th Run On On at Carriage House who acquired his first BH3 sweatshirt before his first BH3 run, and who is on a first name basis with every bartender at the Carriage House. This man has officer potential.) Unusual for Scott to have the most positive view of a personal performance, but it paid off as Hamish came in at 1 hours 25 minutes, more or less, totally exhausted, ruddy kneed, and very relieved not to have been abandoned.

This was an excellent effort all the way around, and especially encouraging after Gweye Lehr Moh's reported success as a virgin hare with the New York City Hash a few weeks before. Everyone else should probably forget about using colored chalk.
